Introduction

Research Question

When everything holds constant, how will the food delivery time interval affect a consumer's willingness to place an order?

- According to Resendes (2020), 33% of customers are willing to pay more in exchange for faster delivery speed.
- From Feb.2020 to Apr.2020, the restaurants who actively use online ordering increase 169% and weekly sales increase 840%.

Hypothesis

Under the same ordering time condition, the shorter the delivery time period is, the more willingly the consumer is to place the order.

Implications

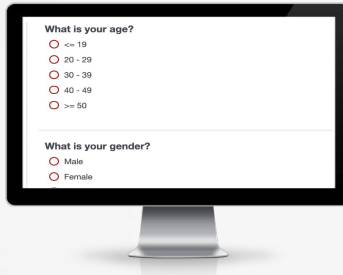

- Have a better understanding of the influence of wait time on consumers' willingness to place an order.
- Help to develop an win-win environment for consumers and businesses entities.

restaurants ~ any_treatment

- Fast Food and Italian Food: the difference between treatment group and control group is statistically significant at 90% confidence level.
- The result might implies that people who order from a fast food restaurant or a pizzeria are more time sensitive. They want their delivery time range as short as possible.
